

WOR

Many things are worth enquiry to one man, which are not so to another. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

3. Equal in possessions to.
Dang'rous rocks,
Which touching but my gentle vessel's side,
Would scatter all the spices on the stream,
Enrobe the roaring waters with my silks;
And in a word, but even now worth this,
And now worth nothing. Shakspeare Merchant of Venice.
Although worth nothing, he shall be proffered in marriage the best endowed, and most beautiful virgin of their island.
Sandys's Journey.

WORTHILY. adv. [from worthy.]

While they pervert pure nature's healthful rules
To loathsome sickness, worthily, since they God's image did not reverence in themselves. Milton.
You worthily succeed, not only to the honours of your ancestors, but also to their virtues. Dryden.

3. Christian men having, besides the common light of all men, so great help of heavenly direction from above, together with the lamps of so bright examples as the church of God doth yield, it cannot but worthily seem reproachful for us to leave both the one and the other. Hooker.

The king is present; if it be known to him
That I gain say my deed, how may he wound,
And worthily, my falsehood. Shakspeare Henry VIII.
A Christian cannot lawfully hate any one; and yet I affirm that some may very worthily deserve to be hated; and of all, the deceiver deserves it most. South's Sermons.

WORTHINESS. n. f. [from worthy.]

1. Desert.
The prayers which our Saviour made were for his own worthiness accepted, ours God accepteth not, but with this condition, if they be joined with a belief in Christ. Hooker.

2. Excellence; dignity; virtue.
Determining never to marry but him, whom she thought worthy of her; and that was one in whom all worthinesses were harboured. Sidney.
He that is at all times good, must hold his virtue to you, whose worthiness would stir it up where it wanted, rather than slack it where there is such abundance. Shakspeare.

Who is sure he hath a soul, unless
It see and judge, and follow worthiness,
And by deeds praise it? he who doth not this,
May lose an inmate soul, but 'tis not his. Donne.
What set my thoughts on work was the worthiness and curiosity of the subject in itself. Holder.

3. State of being worthy; quality of deserving.
She is not worthy to be loved, that hath not some feeling of her own worthiness. Sidney.

WORTHLESS, adj. [from worth.]

And worthless Valentine shall be forgot. Shakspeare.
On Laura's lap you lay,
Chiding the worthless crowd away. Rescramon.

2. Having no value.
My anxious pains we all the day,
In search of what we like, employ:
Scorning at night the worthless prey,
We find the labour gave the joy. Prior.
Am I then doom'd to fall
By a boy's hand? and for a worthless woman? Adison.

WORTHLESSNESS. n. f. [from worthless.] Want of excellence; want of dignity; want of value
But that mine own worthlessness spoils the conceit, I could think our company parallel to the seven wise men of Greece.
More's Divine Dialogues.
A notable account is given us by the apostle of this windy insignificant charity of the will, and of the worthlessness of it, not enlivened by deeds. South's Sermons.

WORTHY. adj. [from worth.]

1. Deserving; such as merits: with of before the thing deserved.
She determined never to marry any but him, whom she thought worthy of her, and that was one in whom all worthi-nesses were harboured. Sidney.
Further, I will not flatter you,
That all I see in you is worthy love,
Than this; that nothing do I see in you That should merit hate. Shakspeare's King John.
Thou art worthy of the sway,
To whom the heavens in thy nativity
Adjudg'd an olive branch and laurel crown. Shakspeare.

WOU

2. Valuable; noble; illustrious; having excellence or dignity.
If the best things have the perfectest and best operations, it will follow, that seeing man is the worthiest creature on earth, and every society of men more worthy than any man, and of society that is the most excellent which we call the church. Hooker.

He now on Pompey's basis lies along,
No worthier than the dust? Shakspeare's Julius Caesar.
A war upon the Turks is more worthy than upon any other Gentiles in point of religion and honour; though hope of success might invite some other choice. Bacon.

3. Having worth; having virtue.
Think of her worth, and think that God did mean,
This worthy mind should worthy things embrace:
Blot not her beauties with thy thoughts unclean,
Nor her dishonour with thy passion base. Dowry.
Happier thou may'st be, worthier canst not be. Milton.

The doctor is well money'd, and his friends
Potent at court; he, none but he, shall have her;
Though twenty thousand worthier come to crave her. Shak.
The matter I handle is the most important within the whole extent of human nature, for a worthy person to employ himself about. Digby on the Soul.
We see, though order'd for the best,
Permitted laurels grace the lawless brow,
Th' unworthy rais'd, the worthy cast below. Dryden.

4. Not good. A term of ironical celebration.
My worthy wife our arms mislaid,
And from beneath my head my sword convey'd;
The door unlatch'd; and with repeated calls Invites her former lord within my walls. Dryden.

5. Suitable for any quality good or bad; equal in value; equal in dignity.
Flowers worthy of paradise.
Thou, Drances, art below a death from me:
Let that vile soul in that vile body rest,
The lodging is well worthy of the guest. Dryden.
My suit 'rings for you make your heart my due;
Be worthy me, as I am worthy you. Dryden.

6. Suitable to any thing bad.
The mercuries Macdonald, Worthy to be a rebel; for to that
The multiplying villanies of nature
Do swarm upon him. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

7. Deserving of ill.
What has he done to Rome that's worthy death. Shakspeare.
If the wicked man be worthy to be beaten, the judge shall cause him to be beaten. Deut. xxv. 2.

WORTHY. n. f. [from the adjective.] A man laudable for any eminent quality, particularly for valour.
Such as are conflagrated unto knowledge come short of themselves if they go not beyond others, and must not sit down under the degree of worthies. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

What do these worthies
But rob and spoil, burn, slaughter, and enslave Peaceable nations. Milton's Paradise Regained.
No worthies form'd by any muse but thine
Could purchase robes, to make themselves so fine. Waller.
For this day's plim, and for thy former acts,
Thou Arthur hast acquir'd a future fame,
And of three Christian worthies art the first. Dryden.
The next worthy came in with a retinue of historians. Teller.

To WORTHY. v. a. [from the adjective.] To render worthy;
to aggrandize; to exalt. Not used.
He conjunct, tripp'd me behind;
And put upon him such a deal of man,
That worthied him; got praises of the king,
For him attempting, who was self-suff'd. Shakspeare.

I WOULD

WOU

2. I WOULD do it. My resolution is that it should be done by me.

WOU'DEST do it. Such must be the consequence to thee.
Thou WOU'DEST do it. This must be the consequence to him or it.
He WOU'DEST do it. This must be the consequence to him or it.

3. He by the rules of his own mind, could construe no other end of mens doings but self-seeking, suddenly feared what they could do, and as suddenly suspected what they would do, and as suddenly hated them, as having both might and mind to do so. Sidney.

4. Was or am resolved; wish or wistful to.
She would give her a lesson for walking so late, that should make her keep within doors for one fortnight. Sidney.
Jealous Philoclea, that was even jealous of herself; for Zelmane would needs have her glove. Sidney.
You would be satisfied?—
Would? nay, and will. Shakspeare's Othello.
They know not what they are, nor what they would be, any further than that they would not be what they are. L'Estr.

It will be needless to enumerate all the simple ideas belonging to each sense: nor indeed is it possible if we would; there being a great many more of them belonging to most of the senses than we have names for. Locke.
By pleasure and pain I would be understood to signify, whatsoever delights or molests us, whether from the thoughts of our minds, or any thing operating on our bodies. Locke.

5. It is a familiar term for wish to do, or to have.
What wouldst thou with us? Shakspeare's King Lear.
Mr. Slender, what would you with me?—
—I would little or nothing with you. Shakspeare.

6. Should wish.
Celia! if you apprehend
The muse of your incensed friend;
Nor would that he record your blame,
And make it live; repeat the fame;
Again deceive him, and again,
And then he swears he'll not complain. Waller.

7. It is used in old authors for should.
The excess of diet would be avoided. Bacon.
As for percolation, which belongeth to separation, trial would be made by clarifying by adhesion, with milk put into new beer and stirred with it. Bacon's Natural History.

8. It has the signification of I wish, or I pray; this, I believe, is improper; and formed by a gradual corruption of the phrase, would God; which originally imported, that God would, might God will, might God decree; from this phrase ill understood came, would to God; thence, I would to God: And thence I would, or elliptically, would come to signify, I wish:
and so it is used even in good authors, but ought not to be imitated.

I would my father look'd but with my eyes. Shakspeare.
I would this music would come. Shakspeare.
I, this found I better know:
Wife men will do it without a law; I would there might be a law to restrain fools. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
Lift! I would I could hear mo. Ben. Johnson.

This is yet the outward, fairest side
Of our design: within rests more of fear
Than my most worthy lords, I would there were. Daniel.
Would thou hadst hearken'd to my words, and stay'd
With me, as I besought thee, when that strange Deire of wand'ring, this unhappy morn, Possess'd thee. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Would God we might prevent the need of such unkindly expedients, and by a thankful sense of what we have, provide to conserve it. Decay of Piety.

I scarce am pleas'd, I tamely mount the throne,
Would Aurengzebe had all their souls in one. Dryden.
And would to heav'n the storm you felt, would bring
On Carthaginian coasts your wand'ring king. Dryden.

WOU'DING. n. f. [from would.] Motion of desire; disposition to any thing; propensity; inclination; incipient purpose.
It will be every man's interest to join good performances to spiritual purposes, to subdue the exorbitancies of the flesh, as well as to continue the wouldings of the spirit. Hammond.

WOUND. n. f. [puno, Saxon; wounds, Dutch.] A hurt given by violence.
I am faint; my gashes cry for help.—
—So well thy words become thee as thy wounds,
They smack of honour both. Shakspeare's Macbeth.
Now flew the wound mine eyes have made in thee;
Scratch thee but with a pin, and there remains
Some fear of it. Shakspeare.

He flopping, open'd my left side, and took
From thence a rib: wide was the wound,
But suddenly fill'd up and heal'd. Milton.
The ailment of such as have fresh wounds should be mild without stimulating or saline substances. Arbutnot on Aliments.
They feel the smart and see the fear of their former wounds; and know that they must be made a sacrifice to the least attempt towards a change. Swift.
